MY SHAMELESS DECEPTION

ON THE CAMPUS OF CLERMONT COLLEGE
I, WENDY MARSH, WAS A POWER TO BE FEARED! AS "THE TATTLER," I WROTE
THE SCHOOL DAILY'S GOSSIP COLUMN
AND I HAD A REPUTATION FOR SEEING ALL AND TELLING ALL! NOTHING WAS
SACRED TO ME! NOTHING, UNTIL I FOUND THAT I HAD KILLED MY OWN LOVE WITH

As "The Tattler", I was the talk of the campus and I enjoyed every second of it___

I walked back to my room well satisfied with a job well done!

MY SKIN'S TOO THIN! I DO ALL
I COULDN'T STAND
THE HATE I'D SEE IN EVERY EYE!

AS YOU!

ME ? HEAVENS, NO!

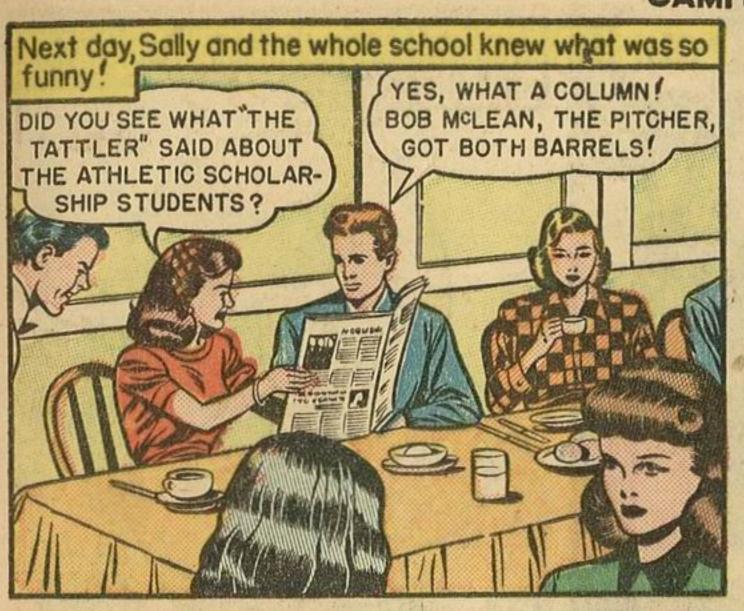

Sally's words had struck home! It was true that no boy ever dated me often...

It was too good to be true! What a laugh!

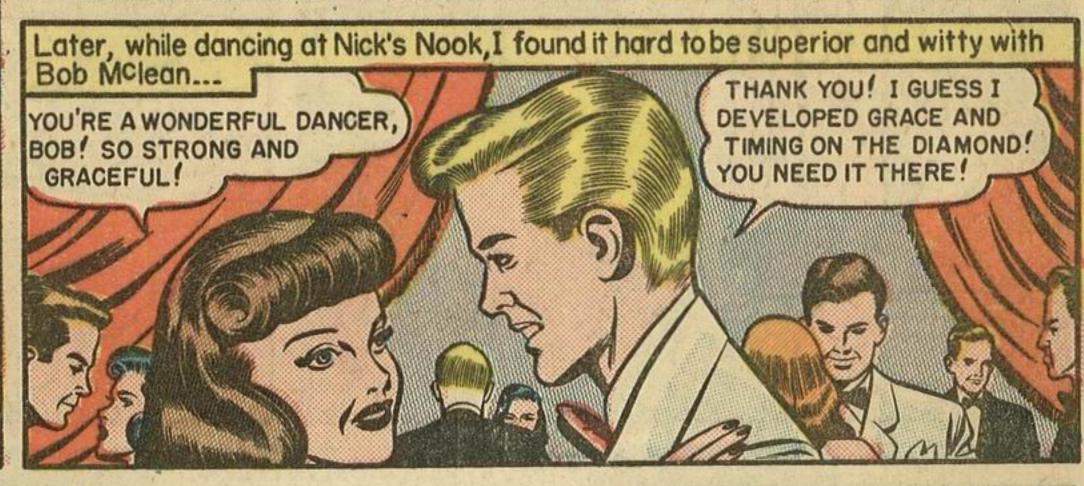

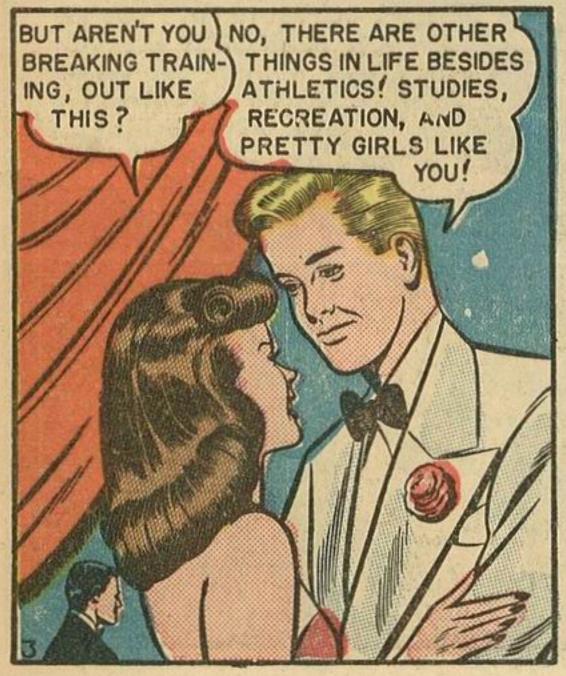

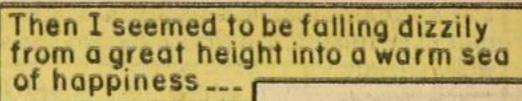

As we danced, I realized I had been very wrong about Bob Mclean! I felt as though I was falling for him!

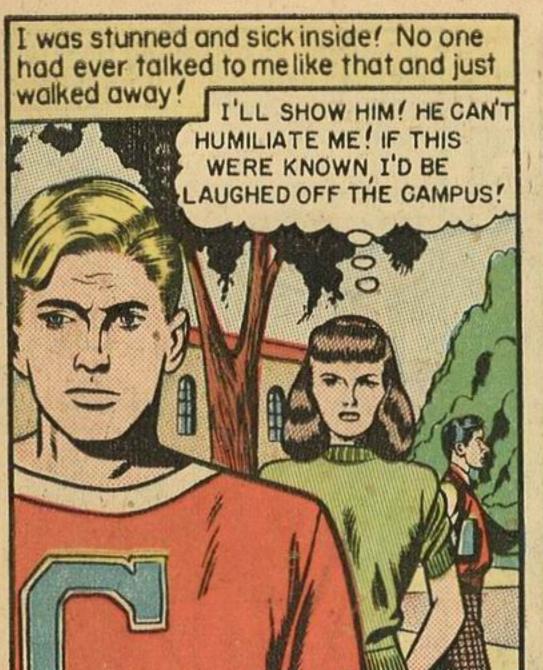

My heart twisted with pain and humiliation,
I set to work to plan revenge against Bob Mclean! In my mind love fought with hate and, for the moment, lost!

LISTEN, YOU LITTLE OH, I'M SO
SILLY! IT'S TRUE! MIXED UP! I'M
WHY DON'T YOU ASK HIM TO THE SADIE BUT I WILL HAWKINS DANCE ASK HIM IF YOU AND FIND OUT? SAY SO, WENDY!

My plan worked like a charm! Bob accepted Bea's invitation!

WELL, NOW THAT BOB I'M TAKING IS OUT, WHO ARE YOU GEORGE BARCLAY!
DRAGGING TO THE BOB'S GOING
SADIE HAWKINS DANCE? WITH BEA KIMBALL

BEA KIMBALL ASKED BOB MCLEAN AND HE ACCEPTED? SHE'S THE SHYEST KID ON THE CAMPUS!

COLUMN FOR FURTHER DETAILS!

That night after curfew

The next day, the campus blazed with the news...

I'd had my revenge on Bob Mclean! But still my shameless heart went on yearning for him!

Dean Francis had a reputation for blunt speech!
My knees shook as I entered her office!

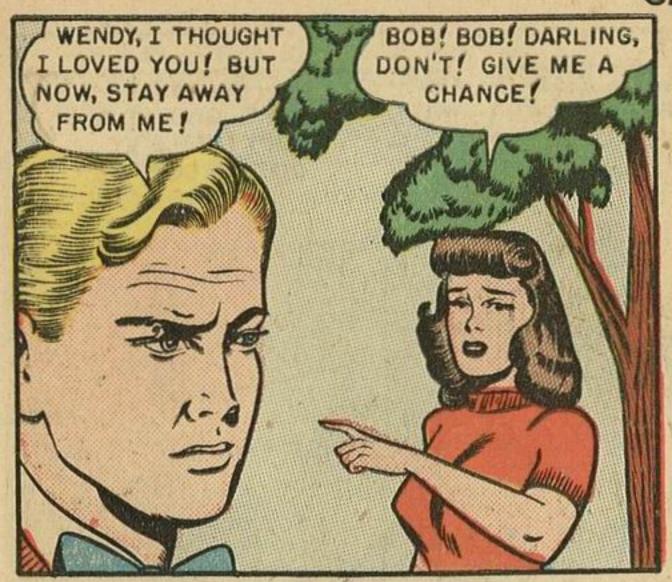

and shame for what I had done! I had to make it up to Bob and Bea!

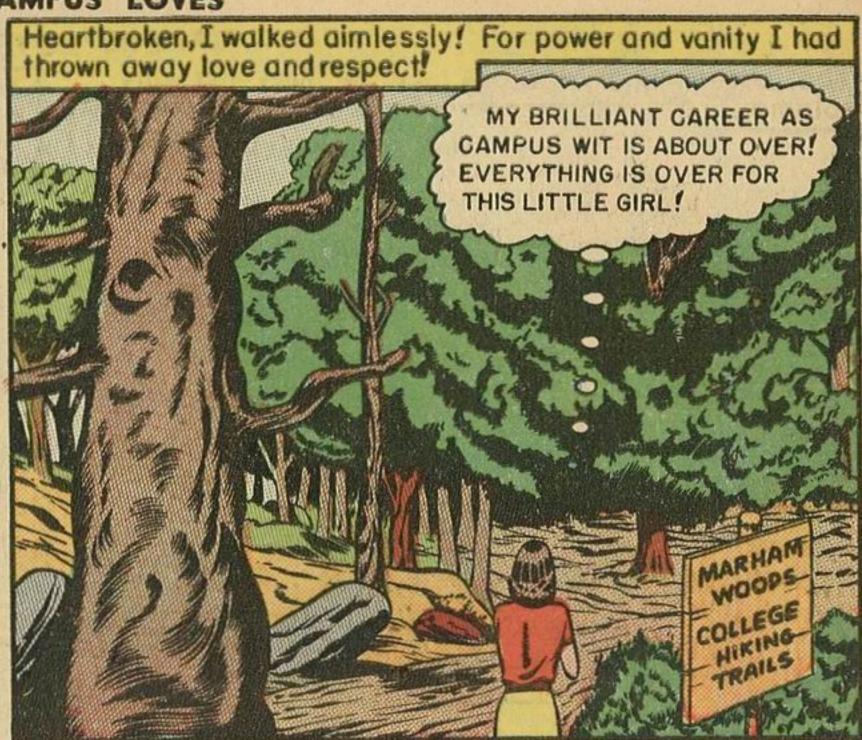

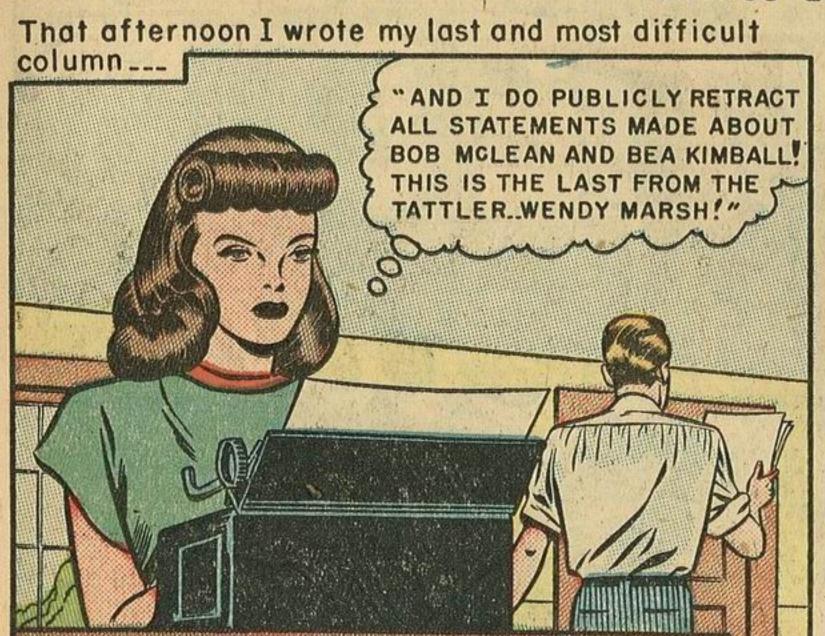

I was frightened! She was in a terrible state and there was the roaring river so near!

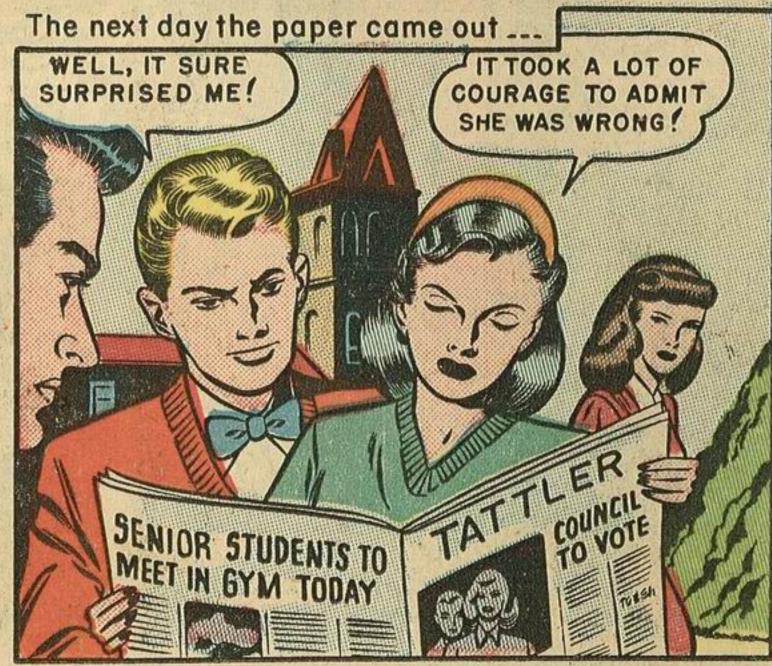

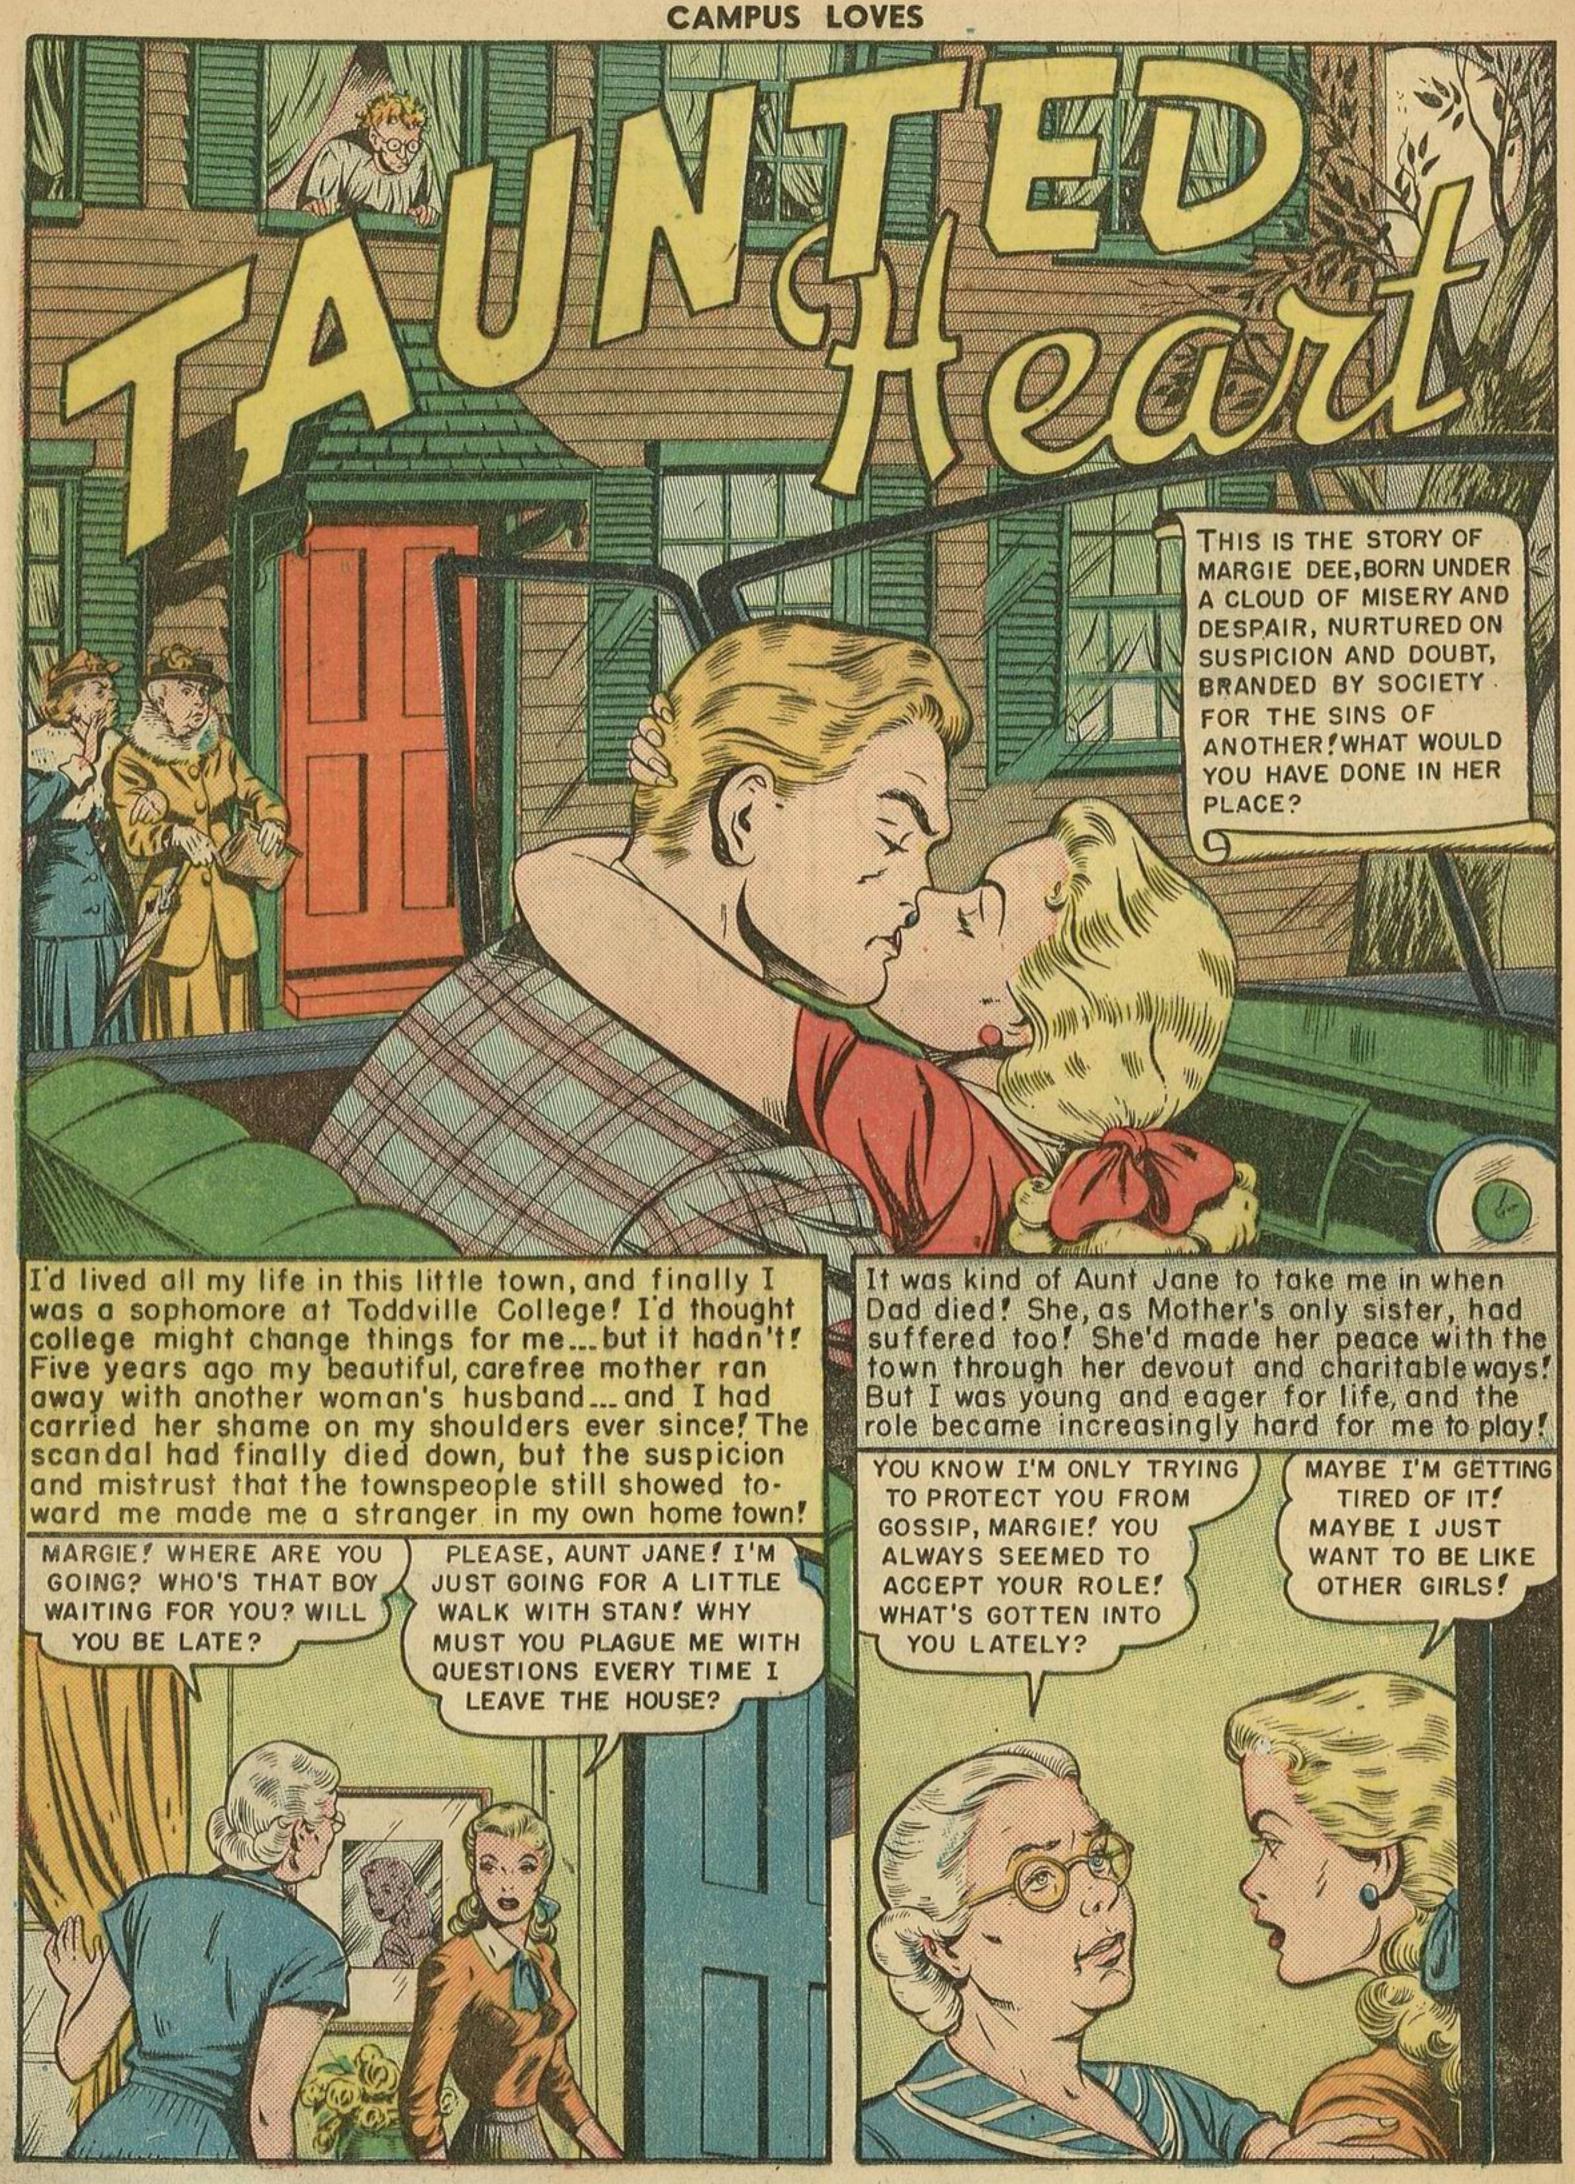

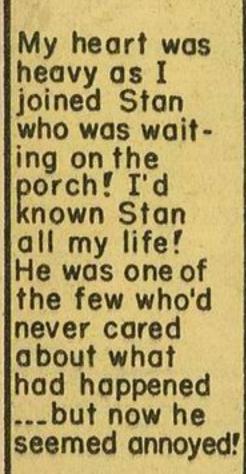

After crying out my helpless bitterness, I finished my studying and was preparing for bed when Aunt Jane rushed into my room!

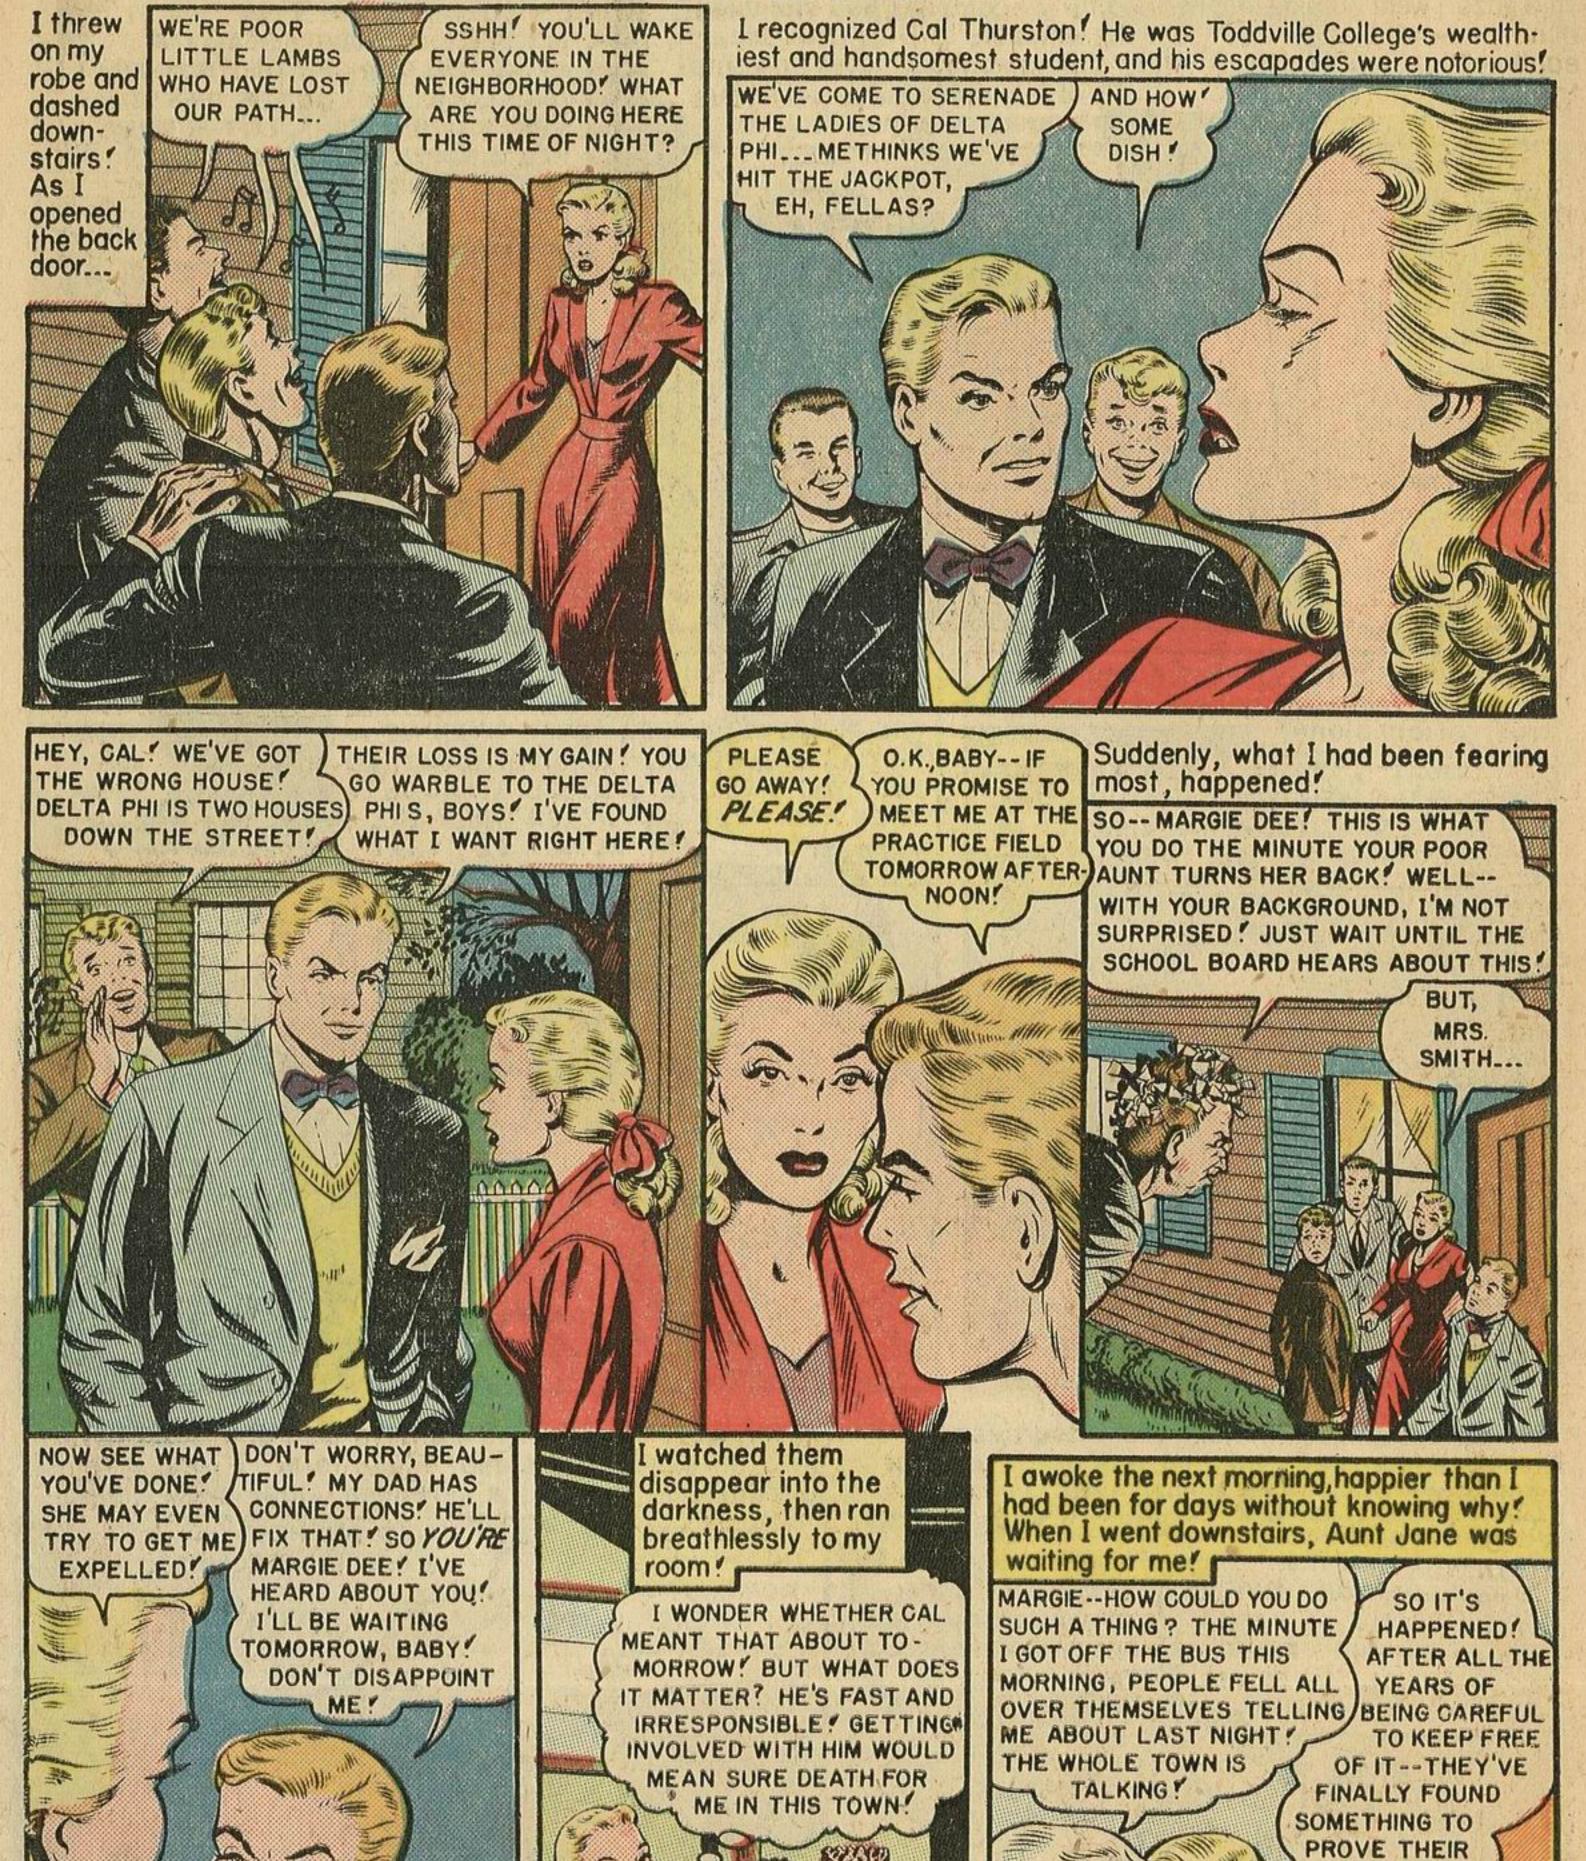

OH, MARGIE! COUSIN MARTHA'S OF COURSE, AUNT HAD ANOTHER STROKE AND I MUST GO TO SPRINGFIELD
TONIGHT! I'LL BE BACK IN THE MORNING FIRST THING! WILL YOU BE ALL RIGHT ALONE, DEAR?

OF COURSE, AUNT
JANE! YOU JUST TAKE GOOD CARE OF COUSIN MARTHA!
DON'T WORRY ABOUT ME!

After Aunt Jane left, I went to bed and soon fell into an exhausted sleep! Much later, I awoke abruptly to a raucous serenade under my window!

SUSPICIONS!

In a daze I went outside and headed for the campus! As I stumbled blindly down the street and heard the whispers drifting after me, each one left a scar on an already gaping wound! I knew how small town gossip worked...a vicious cycle of telephone calls...a whispered tidbit...and the final story holding only a kernel of truth!

And so the afternoon found me at the practice field!

Though I went with Cal at first in defiance of the town's prejudice, soon the excitement I had tasted the first night we met became a permanent part of everything we did together!

Cal took me to his favorite spot, a loud, gaudy roadhouse! I was repelled by the raucous, glittering cheapness of the place and the people! But remembering my promise to myself, I threw myself feverishly into the atmosphere until I was as much at ease as Cal!

The weeks flew by, packed with exhibitantion!
The few self-reproaches I suffered at first,
soon lost themselves in the thrill of love I began to feel for Cal__and then___

All my fears and doubts dissolved in the exquisite fire of rapture in Cal's kiss! How could this be "wrong"or "bad"? Let them talk! How could their shriveled little spinsters' souls comprehend a love like Cal's and mine?

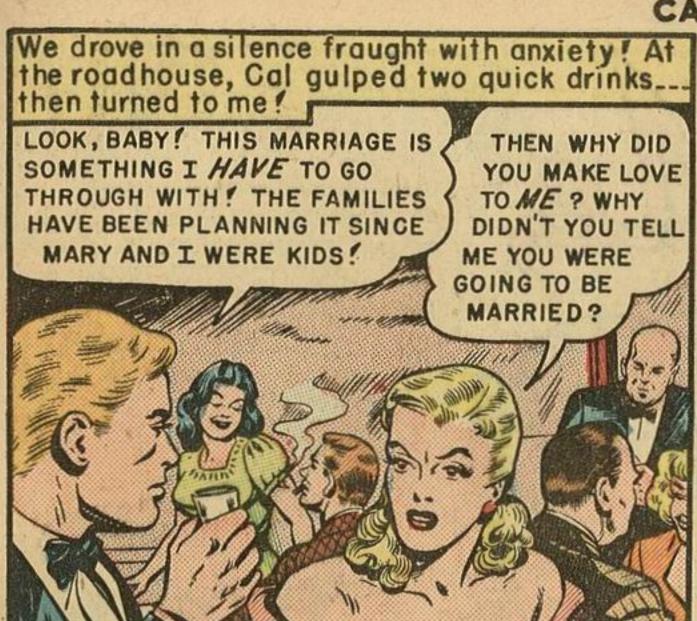

At Cal's home, the butler answered against a background of music and gaiety! After a long wait, I heard Cal's voice, but with a strange note...cautious and cool!

I knew only too well what he meant!
I felt a flush of fury rising to my cheeks and suddenly, it was incredible to me that I could ever have mistaken an insidious, overpowering infatuation for this man for love!

OH, STOP ACTING SO VOU... YOU FILTHY BEAST!
A GIRL LIKE YOU... GET OUT OF HERE!
WITH YOUR BACKGROUND? YOU KNOW ALONE!
EXACTLY WHAT I MEAN!

Without another word, Cal walked out of the roadhouse___ and out of my life! I sat, stunned with bitter despair! The town had won! All of the fight had gone out of me ___ then___

I ARRIVED AT YOUR HOUSE JUST AS YOU
WERE LEAVING WITH AREN'T YOU
CAL! I THOUGHT YOU AFRAID TO MIGHT NEED ME, BE SEEN IN MY
MARGIE ...SO I COMPANY, STAN?
FOLLOWED YOU AFTER ALL...
HERE! WITH MY REPUTATION...

In the warm protective circle of Stan's arms, I gave in to the overflow of anguish which could find respite only in tears!

As I listened to Stan's tender words of encouragement and hope and love, I began to see that the shadow of my Mother's misdeed could only hurt me insofar as I allowed it to ___ and though it was too soon for me to return Stan's love, I could face the future strong and secure in the knowledge of that love!

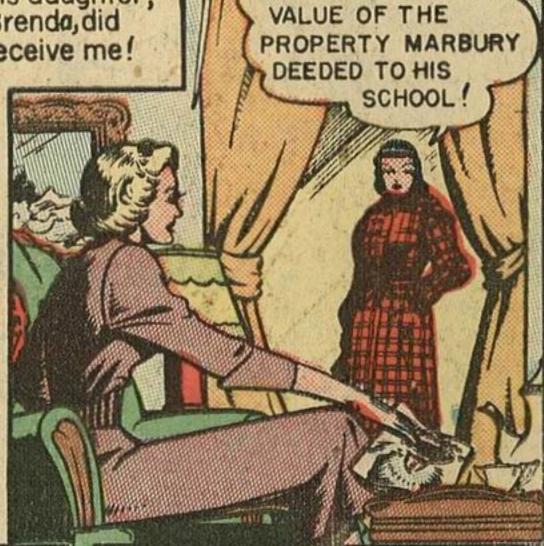

I should have known that the wealthy industrialist wouldn't be so easy to see! However, his daughter, Brenda, did receive me!

How could I face them? Or Sean? I turned hesitatingly! His eyes were filled with the love that comes but once! Then he opened

Weste No For Mildred

"IT'S going on now," the girls on the campus of Hargrove College said to each other. "Every letter man on the team is in there voting. Who'll be elected Queen of the Football Banquet—Mildred Morgan or Gracia Terrill?"

Of all those who hazarded guesses, only Mildred and Gracia seemed to be keeping quiet. Gracia, the tall, dramatic brunette, smiled enigmatically, confidently, as though the honor were hers already. Mildred tried to seem unconcerned; but she kept flushing up to the roots of her blonde hair, and her heart beat and beat until it seemed too huge and violent to stay inside her small, slim body.

Not that she craved the fame and glamor of winning the title, of being crowned by Hargrove's athletic heroes, of being photographed and feted—not much, anyway. But the contest would prove something. Perhaps she'd have to work to find out. Perhaps she'd have to persuade some one of the more talkative lads on the team. But she'd learn which of the two, Gracia or herself, got the vote and support of Ralph Walker, the captain for the season just past, all-American end, and the man she had worshipped since she was a freshman.

Ralph was a senior. He would graduate at mid-year, step into a good job in his father's firm. And perhaps he'd have time, away from study and athletics, to show whether he wanted to marry Mildred Morgan or Gracia Terrill.

Anyway, they were voting over there in the little cottage with the sign that said H ATH-LETIC CLUB. Writing the names of their choices on slips of paper and handing them in be read and counted.

It was maddening, thought Mildred, to have ent these years in school without knowing ust where you stood with Ralph Walker. Oh, he hadn't disliked or ignored her. In his reserved fashion he had shown admiration for her-tall and grave, he'd danced with her at fraternity hops. He'd squired her to one or two parties and mass meetings. He'd taken her to a few picture shows. When she'd won the sophomore prize for creative writing, he'd gravely said, "Nice going, Mildred." When she'd proved too small and light for girls' basketball, he'd sympathized-"Too bad, Mildred." But then, he'd had dates with Gracia, praised her successes, too. And Gracia had had successes, more than Mildred.

Over at the H Athletic Club, the doors were opening. Out sauntered the men of the Hargrove football team, big, rangy fellows; short, chunky fellows; lean, wiry fellows, in their sweaters with H's on them. One of them stopped and posted a sheet of paper on the bulletin board.

"They've decided!" cried someone. "Let's go and look!"

Mildred had intended not to go, to wait for a friend to bring the news. But the resolution fled, she hurried with the others. There it was in big capitals: QUEEN OF THE FOOTBALL BANQUET—GRACIA TERRILL.

Standing there, quiet and calm, Mildred sensed rather than saw the last two football men come out of the club house. "Y'know," one said to the other, "I don't think La Terrill would have made it without Ralph Walker getting up and asking us to vote for her—"

He was gone, and his voice was gone, and so was Mildred's whole will to live. Ralph had chosen Gracia, then! She made her way off somewhere, refusing to wipe tears, until she reached the edge of the cedars at Webster Grove.

"Mildred," said another voice, soft and a little timid, "I followed you down here."

Ralph Walker. What did he want?

"Let me alone," she sobbed. "You got them to vote against me. Let me alone. Go away."

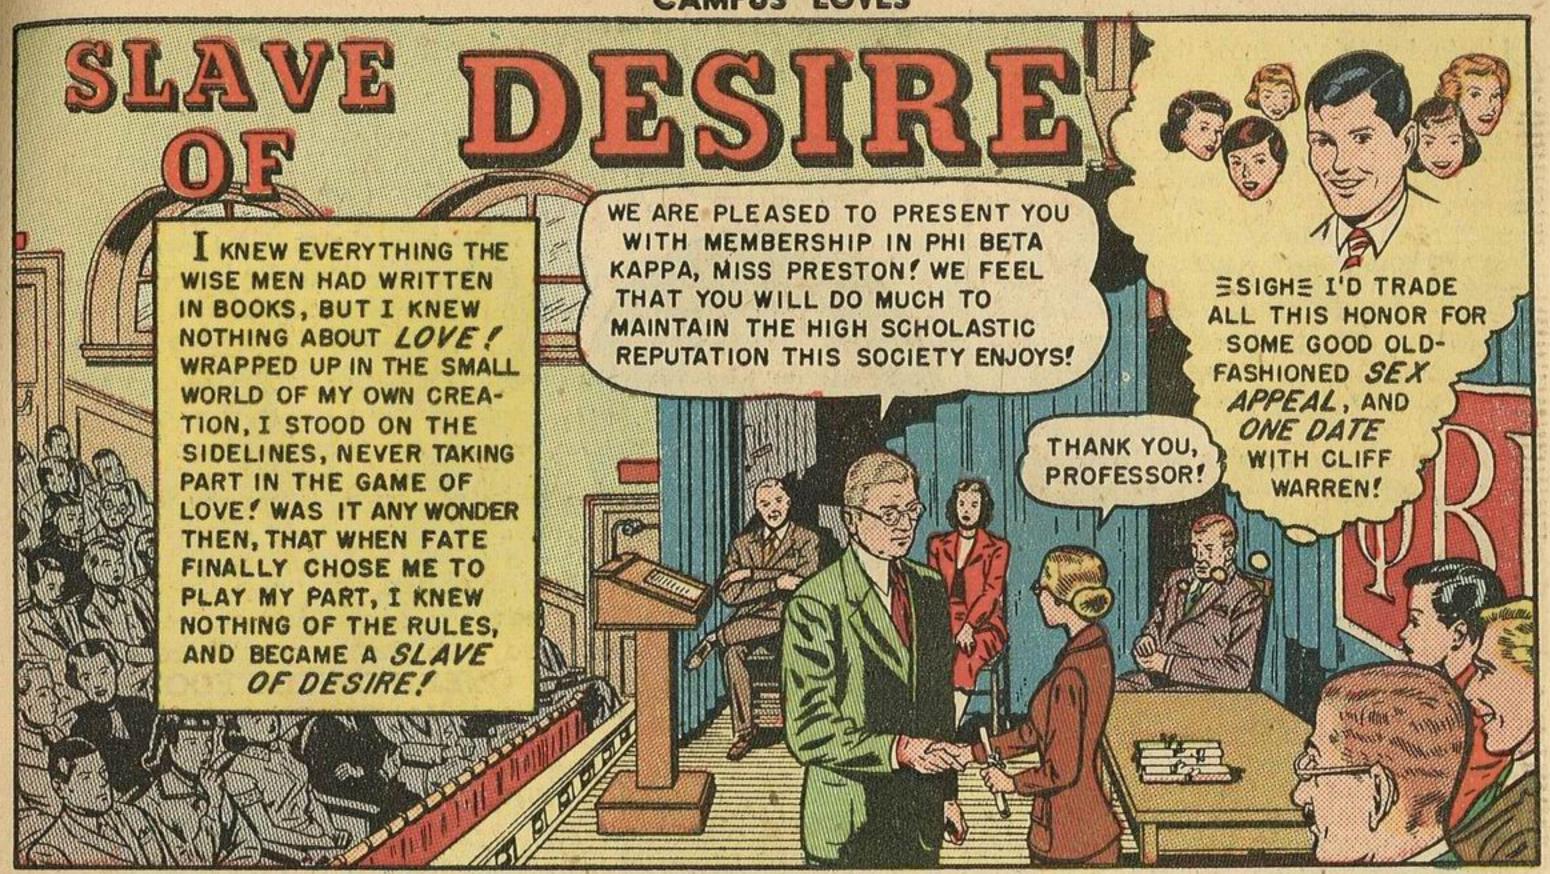

"I seem to have done the wrong thing," he ventured.

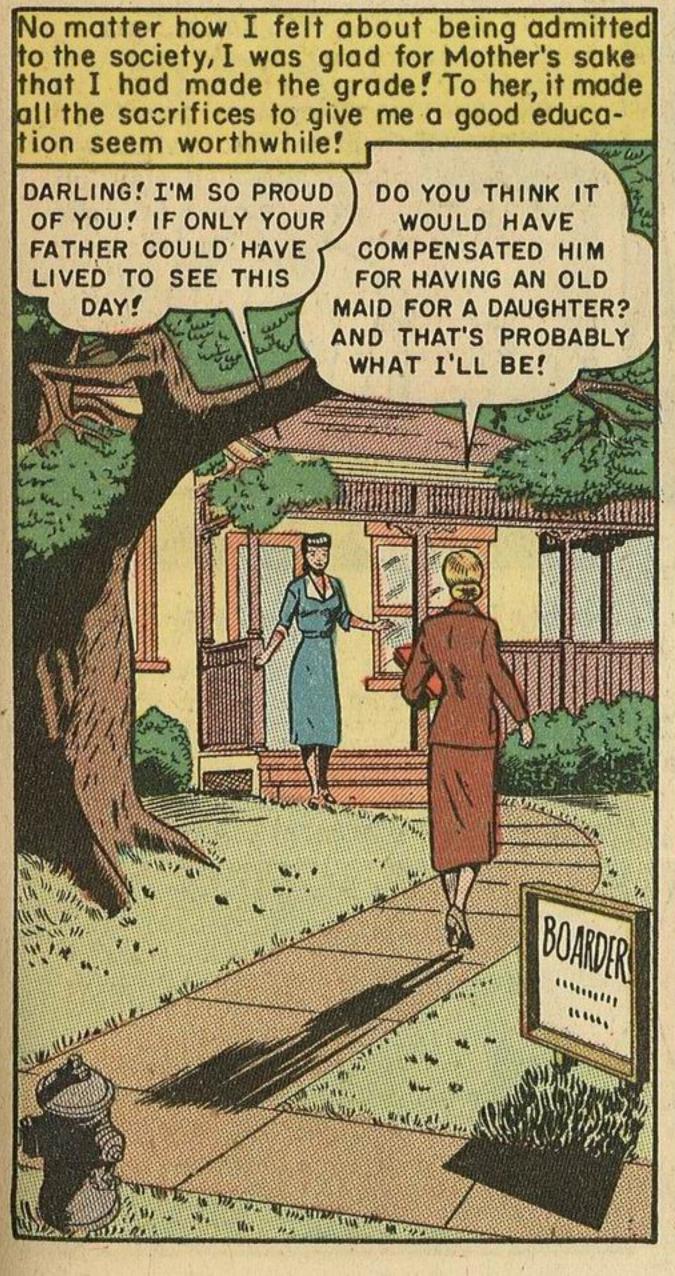

"No, probably you did the right thing. Gracia will be grateful—"

"Have you forgotten that the Queen attends the banquet, escorted by the captain for next season, Mildred? I suppose it was a dirty trick to play on you but, since I was captain last season, I'll have to take someone else. And I thought I'd ask you. In fact, I've something else to ask you. But, if I made you mad by getting the other men to elect Gracia—"

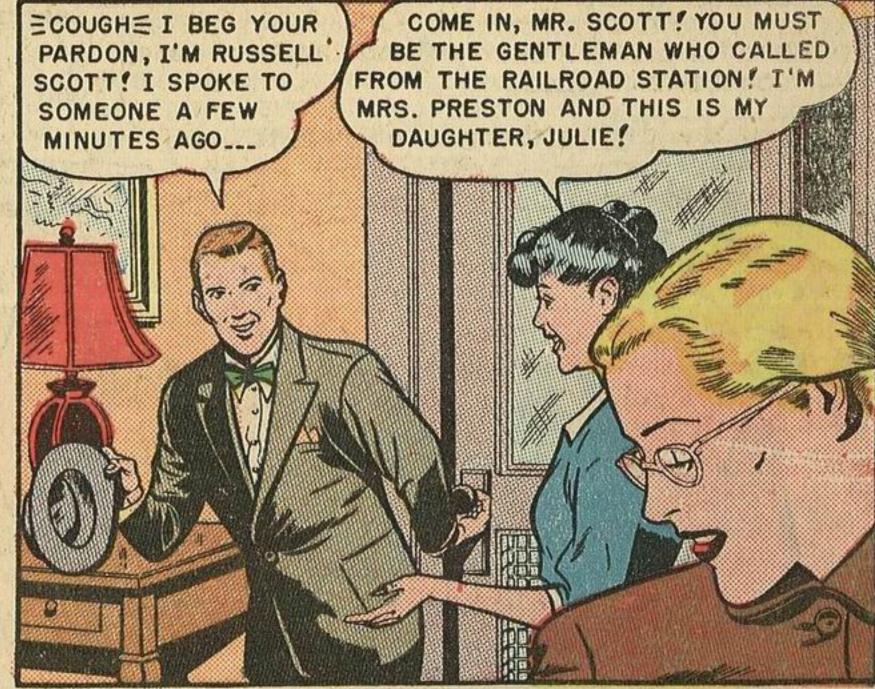

"No! You did just what you should have done!"

Webster Grove was far from the center of the campus, but not too far for the keenest-eyed of the students to see a slight, blonde girl in the arms of a tall young man with an H on his sweater.

I looked at this stranger, too humiliated to utter a sound! How much of our conversation had he heard? Mother, as always, gallantly rushed to my rescue!

INDEFINITELY, I'D YOU COME RIGHT UP-SAY, MRS. PRESTON! STAIRS WITH ME, MR. I HAVE A NEW JOB SCOTT! I'LL SHOW HERE THAT WILL YOU TO YOUR ROOM! START IN A COUPLE HOW LONG DO YOU OF WEEKS! IN THE INTEND TO STAY WITH MEANTIME, I US? EXPECT TO LOAF A LITTLE AND GET ACQUAINTED WITH THE TOWN!
